I currently work as an Avionics Field Engineer and perform 60-70% of my job tasks from my home. My wife currently works 100% out of the house and has for the last 9 years. The upgrade from dial up or Satellite Ethernet to DSL would greatly enhance both of our productivity numbers tremendously and reduce the amount of time we must work to make up for lost time due to failed connections due to weather, etc..

The addition of this service in our community would be a huge technological step in the direction of the 21st century. I believe that it would be well received and the vendor of this service would reap a bountiful sum over the course of time as newer technologies become available.

In short, we need to embrace the changes in technology rather than try to avoid them. This would be a positive step in the right direction for all.
